Although I may have taken the equation  $f: r + 7 = 8x - 12$ , by chance, for to serve for example, it ought to be considered (likewise all those of which I shall speak) as coming from a problem of which we can always find an expression, by converting the equation into ordinary language. That of which we have spoken lastly shows how we may find a number such, that in adding 7 to  $f$  of itself, the sum will be equal to 8 times itself, minus 12. Similarly, the equation  $ax + be - ex = ac - bx$ , (in which the letters  $a$ ,  $b$ , and  $c$ , stand to represent known quantities, and  $x$  to represent unknown) answers to the following question: --To find a number ( $x$ ) such, that in multiplying it by a given number ( $a$ ), then adding the product of the two given numbers ( $6$  and  $c$ ), and taking away from this sum the product of the given number ( $c$ ) by the unknown term ( $x$ ), there may be a result equal to the product of the numbers  $a$  and  $c$ , minus that of the numbers  $b$  and  $x$ . To draw from an equation the value of the unknown quantities, or to have the unknown terms only on one side of the equation, and the known terms on the other, is what we call solving an equation. The known and unknown quantities can be expressed by any letters we wish, but the unknown are usually...
